

that prisoners for misdemeanour must be allowed to provide their own meals, it was doubtful whether the bench could interfere if they ordered in turtle soup and turbot. The bench seemed to think there could be no objection to the pint of ale per diem, and it was stated that the officers would soon have some companions in the Chartist who were sentenced to the same terms.

